Last weekend, Daniel's nieghbour invited him to join a trip to the city museum. Daniel was curious because he love history and wanted to discover something new. Early on Saturday morning, he packed his backpack with a water bottle, a notebook, and some sandwiches. The bus stop was crowded with families, children, and tourist's carrying colourful maps.

When they arrived, Daniel was amazed by the tall glass building. Inside, there were enourmous dinosaur skeletons, anciant coins, and beautiful paintings. A friendly guide explained the exhabits and answered questions. Daniel took notes carefully because he wanted to remember new vocabulary and details for his school project.

At lunchtime, the group sat in the museum cafe. They ate delicious sandwiches and drink hot chocolate. Daniel listened to his friends talking about their favourite stories. Although he was usually shy, he joined the conversation and shared his opinions. This made him feel more confidence.

In the afternoon, they watched a short film about space explorasion. The images of rockets and astronouts were exciting and inspiring. Finally, when the trip ended, Daniel felt tired but happy. He realised that travelling and learning with friends was more enjoyable than studying alone.
